Pollution Abatement - COA targets sources of ocean pollution and has succeeded in closing all eight ocean dumpsites off the coast of NJ. From ending ocean dumping to spearheading campaigns and blocking ocean industrialization, COA has a proud record of taking on some of the region's greatest pollution threats and achieving success. The number one ocean pollution problem is non-point source pollution (NPSP). COA has many programs to motivate citizens to get involved and make a difference to ebb the tide of NPSP and improve water quality. In addition, COA has worked through state and federal programs to enhance and improve regulations to identify and reduce pollution sources. COA also works at the grassroots level, including litter abatement programs and citizen-action microplastics research to reduce sources of pollution.

Research- COA continues to target sources of ocean pollution by reviewing all ocean discharge permit applications, as well as dredged material management permit applications. In addition, COA monitors federal register notices and state public notices to determine if proposed projects will be detrimental to marine water quality and responds accordingly. Moreover, ocean energy proposals, ocean acidification and climate change impacts are reviewed to ensure ocean water quality protection. COA also acts as a watchdog by responding to and investigating calls from citizens about
